

M'KINLEY SIGNS THE BILL.

The Dingley Tariff Measure Became a Law at 4:04 Yesterday Afternoon.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The Dingley tariff bill is now the law of the land. The last step necessary was taken at the White House when the President affixed his signature at 4:04 o'clock to-day. It had been arranged that the President should go to the Capitol to perform that function, but, owing to uncertainty as to the time that the bill would be ready that plan was abandoned.

The members of the Cabinet who are in Washington came to the White House about half-past 3 o'clock and assembled with the President in the Cabinet room. A few moments before 4 o'clock Representative Dingley appeared, accompanied by Representative Hagar, chairman of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills. They were admitted at once into the presence of Mr. McKinley. The latter was sitting quietly at the long Cabinet table, with Secretary Gage and Attorney-General McKenna on one side and Postmaster-General Cary and Secretary Wilson on the other. He rose and greeted Mr. Dingley and Mr. Hagar cordially.

The President had several pens at hand, the one of which he used to sign the tariff bill. But Mr. Dingley, unexpectedly taking a case from his pocket, produced a beautiful mother-of-pearl handled pen, daintily enough for a lady's use, and requested that it be used for the signature. The President recognized the right of Mr. Dingley, though he laughingly commented upon the diminutive size of the pen. He then appended his signature to the bill, asking the date, and wrote "July 24th, approved," and the bill was an act.

NELSON DINGLEY, JR.

An Acknowledgment of the Services He Has Rendered to the Country.

Washington Star, Ind.

The country is not unaware of how much is owed to Nelson Dingley, Jr., in the matter of the solution of the tariff problem. A man of capacity, of thoroughness, of conscientiousness and large experience, he brought to the task to which Speaker Reed assigned him as fine a character and as full equipment as the occasion required or as his party could have desired.

The country applauded the Speaker's selection, and then as generously applauded Mr. Dingley's justification of that selection. The bill reported by him to the House, and under his leadership passed by the House, bore the stamp upon every important page of his knowledge and sound judgment. It was in a word, such a bill as his party had promised to the country, and it is not too much to say that had it been accepted by the Senate and promptly passed, both the Republican party and the country would have been greatly the gainers. But a great deal of Mr. Dingley's work is returned, and it is a safe prediction that those portions of the new law which prove to be the most beneficial in operation will be found to be those devised by Mr. Dingley and his associates of the House.

Congress at its regular session next Winter will have work of the first importance presented to it, and it is assuring to reflect that on the House side it will come under the supervision and direction of a leader in every way so competent as the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Labouchere and Monarchy.

From the London Times

Monarchy in England will last my time, but even if the hereditary principle is maintained in regard to the line of the State, the fates and fashions in connection with a court will probably have disappeared by the time those who come after us are discussing the events of the twentieth century; for all this is every day becoming more and more out of harmony with modern thought. Those, however, who would have the institution continue in its present form to succeed would do well to reserve the title and limit the succession to the throne to females, for they are far more fitted for the ornamental function of reigning without ruling than men. Their weakness is their strength, and they have tact.

FOOD PRODUCTS IN WAR TIMES.

Nations in Broils Consume Large and Produce Small Quantities.

A member of the British house of commons discusses a question which would have immediate and very serious interest for this country. If the European war that is always to be regarded as a possibility should actually occur. It has already been proposed on the continent that in case of war food be declared contraband. The primary effect of this would be to place Great Britain at a tremendous disadvantage if she were one of the parties to the contest. That country now imports food to the value of about $750,000,000 a year. Of wheat and flour alone it imports 23,000,000 quarters a year and produces only 5,000,000. The stock on hand is never more than three months' supply and sometimes no more than one, so that making food contraband would be quite likely to result in a bread famine within a very moderate time.

Of the vast quantity of food imported the United States furnishes about $200,000,000 worth. If food shipped to Great Britain were recognized by the contending powers as contraband of war our trade would suffer immensely. Insurance of cargoes might easily rise to a point which would stop shipments. Of the further effects it is unnecessary to speculate at present, but it is evident that the proposition to declare food products contraband has a vital interest for us as very large shippers of such supplies. Mr. Seton Kerr, the author of the North American article, suggests that in no event would this country join in recognizing the proposed addition to international law and in this he is doubtless correct.

For England the proposition is so threatening that Mr. Seton Kerr has introduced in the house of commons a resolution, since adopted, which declares the situation demands "the serious attention of her majesty's government." Great Britain cannot consent to the proposed change nor can she prevent its adoption by the continental powers if they choose to take such action, which indeed will give to account for the open support the plan has secured from some of them, notably France. The gravity of the situation is further indicated by a proposition, which is said to be favorably considered in England, for creating there a government reserve of wheat sufficient to last at least six months. Government authorities are believed to be giving this project serious attention. If it is undertaken there will be a large new demand for American wheat. Perhaps that is all that will come of it, and this is greatly to be hoped.—Hartford Courant.

EARLY METAL WORKERS.

Antiquity of the Art Established by Recently Discovered Inscriptions. The earliest miners and metal workers of whom we have record were the Aryan peoples of Euro-Asian origin, who, though of pastoral and arboreal habits, were familiar with the metals and worked with them—at least with the metals gold, silver and bronze. Chaldeans and Assyrians, as we now know from the cuneiform inscriptions which go back 3,000 years B. C., were undoubtedly expert in the use of metals, while the Egyptians had an intimate knowledge of the arts and sciences. In the brick and other inscriptions recently discovered artisans are seen at work with curious details of their methods and tools. Pottery, indeed, had attained eminence in their art, and the Egyptians had certainly a knowledge of chemistry, as the samples of their glass blowing and stone pictures of tools, forges, blow-pipe, etc., prove. Gold was largely used at an early period—between 4,000 and 5,000 years B. C., as we find from some newly discovered and ingenious weighing balances. Many centuries older than the pyramids, which date from 50 to 60 centuries back, we have examples of engineering in Memphis, which could not have been constructed without tools and necessarily an acquaintance with metals. The word "metals" is of Semitic origin—the Hebrew word "matals," to forge, indicates an early acquaintance with the fusing of ores and the malleability of metals.

How these early primitive people discovered the uses of things must, of course, have been through their wants and needs, particularly after they left pastoral and tent life and began to build cities. The Arabs are credited with being early acquainted with the alloys, though alchemy, as a science dates only from the sixteenth century.—Self Culture.

Stag Hunting at Night. Wonderfully elaborate open-air fetes, often the scene of some mummery or coup de theatre celebrating scenes in connection with venery, were frequent occurrences. Thus, Louis XIV. more than once held stag hunts at night; and for that purpose the great forest of Chantilly was illuminated with torches, and the hunted stag was forced to pass through avenues lined by several thousand men holding brightly flaring, flaming flambeaux in their hands. Several of the princesses of his court were daring riders, and from the letters of one of these royal ladies, a duchess of Orleans, we learn that in four years she was present at the death of over thousand stags. Her descriptions of the sport are most enthusiastic. "I have had 25 falls, but have hurt myself only once," she says in one of her letters.—W. A. Baillie-Grohman, in Century.

A False. Yeast—What do you think of that man Bloobbs? He reads the future, you know.

Crimsonback — Reads nothing! I was with him last night until late and do you know what the last thing he said to me was?

"No; I can't imagine."

"He said: 'Your wife won't say a thing to you to-night.' He's a fake!" —Yonkers Statesman.
